It's 2071, and Kia is a kid with a very inventive mind. In fact, she has a list of 67 inventions she'd love to have the opportunity to create. First, she has to be accepted at the prestigious Piedmont Inventor's Prep School. When she wins a chance to represent her school at the Piedmont Challenge competition, Kia does everything she can to work with her team, "The Crimson Five", and make her grandmother proud, all the while keeping her eye on the prize. Grilled Cheese and Dragons
By Nancy Krulik J F Krul
132 pages Fantasy

The last thing Princess Serena wants is to be a princess. She'd much rather be a knight, and share stories at the Skround Table with the other knights. In addition, things aren't going too well at The School of Ladylike Manners, where she renames herself "Princess Pulverizer". Her father offers her the chance to train, but only if she can successfully complete a Quest of Kindness to show that she has the required knightly qualities. Can Dribble, a cooking dragon, and Lucas, a knight-in-training, help Serena prove herself to be a hero after all?

Robots
By Nathan Lepora J 629.892 Lepo
64 pages Nonfiction

Have you ever wondered when the first robot was invented, and what it looked like? Or what made scientists even think about inventing them in the first place? This new DK book will show you how computer engineers design and program robots for very specific purposes, how they function, and the future of robots in our lives, including toys, cyborgs, and bots with artificial intelligence!

Whistling in the Dark
By Shirley Hughes J F Hugh 227 pages Historical Fiction

Life isn't easy for anyone in England during World War II, and Joan's family is no exception. While enduring nightly Nazi air raids, shrinking food rations, and curfews, she and her friend Doreen try to make the best of their new reality. When a Polish refugee arrives at school, Joan does what she can to reunite the girl with her father, who has deserted the British army. The author's own experiences helped her write a story that reflects the history and personal struggles of the time.
